

ABSTRACT

Parenting patterns in the family is a phrase that gathers four important elements. Thus, parenting pattern is a consistent and persistent parental effort in maintaining and guiding the child from birth to adolescence. parenting pattern is a pattern of behavior applied to the child and is relatively consistent from time to time. . This study aims to find out how Parenting Patterns In Overcoming Juvenile Delinquency In Smpn 1 Dayeuhkolot. The theory used in this study is the theory of parental compassion according to Bahri Djamarah. M.Ag, where pola parenting in the family is a phrase that gathers four important elements, namely patterns, foster care, parenting and family. The method used is qualitative research. The informants in this study were parents of students and students of SMPN 1 Dayeuhkolot who came from Bandung, parents of students have an age range from 33-35 years, students have an age range from 13-14 years and parents are female and informant students are male and female. The conclusion of this study is as follows: Families have an important role in overcoming juvenile delinquency where parenting patterns must be done well in order to minimize the occurrence of juvenile delinquency in children either at school or outside school with good parental control over the child, the child will become a better person. Parents should also not compare their child to other children, which will result in the child becoming distrustful, parents also need to free the child so that the child can further develop the talents he has while the parents supervise the child.

Keywords: juvenile delinquency, parents and children, parenting patterns