Embellishment or decoration on textiles has indeed become part of various cultures around the world, including in Indonesia. Beadwork is a form of embellishment that has long been known and practiced in many cultures, both for religious, customary, and daily purposes. Although beadwork has its historical roots outside Indonesia, but with time and cultural interaction, the motifs and techniques of beadwork in Indonesia have developed into a unique and distinctive form according to the needs and values of local culture. The purpose of this research is to develop variations of the three dimensional embellishment using beadwork technique with inspiration from visual forms of coral reefs in woman's clothing. The research method used is a qualitative method in the form of literature study, interviews, observations, and exploration using beads material. The final result of this research is women's fashion products with the application of embellishment using beadwork techniques based on inspiration of coral reefs.
